Slept Seven Months.

The young Sicilian who is now gradually awakening from a seven months' sleep apparently holds the world's record as a sleeper, but England has in her time had slumberers of note. There was the case of Samuel Chilton, the Somersetshire marvel of the seventeenth century, who attracted the attention of many of the learned, and set them "testing" him with "large pins and caustic ammonia" in the gentle fashion of the day. Chilton fell asleep in August and slept on into January, in spite of the large pins of inquiring scientists. A Newcastle girl, too, is recorded as having slept for nearly four months in the eighteenth century. But that seven months' sleeper wakens for a very different world from that he closed eyes upon!—London Chronicle.

Superstitions of Japan.

In Japan the nursery is still protected from the hordes of measles and other infections by means of an inscription over the nursery door stating with exquisite urbanity "this child is not at home." In the Wellcome Historical Medical Museum, says the London Lancet, a most fascinating exhibition is on view, illustrative of "Japanese charms, amulets, votive offerings, and objects of medical interest," among which these nursery notices occupy an important place. Akin to these notices are the charms embodied as toys. A yellow tiger with a wagging head is now said to be a toy, but anciently it was a form of exorcism against palsy and numbness of the limbs.
